

Richard Nicol

Seattle, WA

rlnicol@msn.com

The photos reference the ongoing policy of cruelty against the most vulnerable people and other living things in our community. Humans, trees, plants and animals which can't defend themselves are suffering terribly from our hyper- and predatory capitalism, which recognizes only market forces and not a humane social contract that would create a viable community for all. This is a conscious choice. Racial and class hatred are the forces that are making ours a more and more unequal and divided society. Those with wealth and property can expect to live longer and have advantages that those who are poor will never enjoy. These issues have long been a basis for art and will certainly continue into the future.

